Criminology tries to do this through the study of criminal behavior, of the criminal sanctions that derive from the crime, as well as of the crime itself.But, in addition, criminology also focuses on crime prevention, understanding in depth the criminal behavior and the relationship between victim and offender.Although it works for the judicial system or collaborates with forensic medicine, criminology is not in charge of gathering evidence against punishable acts; that is the work of criminalistics, which is carried out by police forces.Criminology aims to understand criminal behavior in depth, taking into account multiple factors related to biological, psychological and social aspects. It can also analyze cultural aspects if the punishable act takes place in a specific historical context.This discipline is not new and has had an interesting evolution over time. It has become a multidisciplinary science that still has much to contribute to societies.
